Postmaster Says To Plan Early Mailing

Noting that the Christmas season is just around the corner, Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield today urged the public to begin planning Christmas mailings now.

He coupled this plea with a warning that the Post Office Department is unable each year to deliver or return about half a million parcels including many lost at Christmas time because of poor packaging or addressing.

He suggested several steps that can be taken by mailers to protect themselves against loss:

1. Check and revise mailing lists.

2. Type or hand-print gummed mailing labels.

3. Use complete addresses. Don't abbreviate. Inuclude delivery zone number.

4. Make a list of your mailing needs and start buying good quality mailing mastials now—strong cord, heavy wrapping paper, and so forth.

5. Get at least some Christmas parcels in the mails soon with a notation that they are not to be opened until Christmas. This will minimize mailing problems during the Christmas rush.

6. Plan to use insurance on all parcels. (Neither insurance fees nor parcel post rates were affected by recent postal rate changes, incidentally.)

Mr. Summerfield also discussed what happens when parcels become lost, and some interesting stories have grown up over the years concerning dead parcel post auction sales.

Lost parcels are auctioned, yielding about a quarter million dollars annually, from approximately half a million parcels, for the U. S. Treasury.

However, this is one of the less welcome sources of revenue. Postal employees know that, in addition to the expense and delays involved, lost parcels usually mean disappointment for someone at Christmas time, frequently for children.

Postal employees cannot participate in the bidding. They do, however, act as auctioneers, and take pride in attempting to get as much of the true value of the article as possible.

This is illustrated by the story that one auctioneer became so absorbed in his work that he sold the coat to his own brand new suit for a dollar and a half.

Sometimes, though, auctioneers are unsuccessful in their efforts to get a good price. At a San Francisco auction, for instance, the auctioneer let a man's wallet go for a small amount of money only to have the successful bidder lift two $50 bills from a secret compartment in the wallet.

Once a local post office has exhausted all efforts to make delivery or return a parcel, and has held it unclaimed for the standard 90 days, it is usually lost forever to the sender or intended recipient.

An Inside-Out Job

Wife (whispering) — "Wake up, John. There's a burglar going through your pockets." Husband (buttering sleepily) — "Leave me out of it. You two fight it out yourselves."
